College Philosophy Prof. Awarded National Grant

A Skidmore College philosophy professor, Dr. J. Arthur Honeywell, has been awarded a National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities summer research grant to study philosophic discussions of revolution.

Dr. Honeywell is one of about 100 scholars in the United States to receive the summer stipend from the national foundation.

In proposing his study of what philosophers past and present have said about the nature of revolution, Dr. Honeywell said that much of the current talk about revolutions is not helpful in either understanding the complexities or resolving the problems of the world scene.

"I believe that the ways we choose to formulate and discuss problems determine in large part the solutions we are able to find for them," he said. "We tend to describe revolution in terms of a simple distinction between conservatives and revolutionaries, when in fact it usually involves more complex relationships. Whenever this simple opposition leads to the confrontation of two fixed positions, we seldom find a stable solution to any social problem." The professor added that much discussion today is based on a limited knowledge of the theory and history of revolutions, as well as on the idea that there is only one sort of radical change.

New Unit Backs Route to Maine

Another group has joined the supporters of the Amsterdam-Maine expressway.

The group is eyeing a northern route of the highway, with an exit in the Watertown-Ogdensburg area.

This group joins the original supporters, led by Bernard Streeter of New Hampshire, who have been seeking support in Washington for the expressway. Last week, the group was told that if Congress approved extension of the interstate highway system, a study of the three-state highway would be made.

The House has before it a bill that would extend the interstate system 6,000 miles, and the Senate has a bill that would extend it 25,000 miles. Federal funds provide 90 per cent of the construction cost of an interstate highway.

The route, as proposed by Streeter's delegation, would begin at the Thruway at Amsterdam, continue to Saratoga Springs, Glens Falls, Rutland, Vt., Hanover, N. Y., Farmington, Bangor, and terminate at Calais, Maine.
